End-to-End Learning of Driving

We will talk about the two main approaches to end-to-end learning of driving with examples from the literature. We will start with imitation learning, explain the distribution shift problem, and show some example solutions from the literature. Then, we will continue with reinforcement learning, introduce its challenges, and show possible solutions for data efficiency problems by learning compact representations.